PLANTS LIVE AT THE ZOO, TOO!
MONTHLY GARDEN TOURS SHOWCASE LANDSCAPE AT POINT DEFIANCE ZOO & AQUARIUM

TACOMA, Wash. – Animals aren't the only residents of the Point Defiance Zoo & Aquarium. The zoo is also home to hundreds of varieties of plants, which fulfill important roles on grounds.

Join zoo horticulturist Bryon Jones at 10 a.m. Sunday, March 6 for an hour-long Garden Tour to learn about many of the plants in the zoo's collection.

The assortment of plants around the zoo "sets a stage for the animals," said Jones, who joined zoo staff in 2005. With a master's degree in environmental horticulture, Jones has worked to cultivate a stunning botanical paradise.

"It's always changing, which is how the natural world is," said Jones. "My goal is to show the connection between plants, animals, and people."

Drought-tolerant plants, primarily of the Southwestern United States and Southern Hemisphere, adorn Kids' Zone and other areas of the zoo. More than 40 varieties of bamboo and colorful flowers pop up in the Asian Forest Sanctuary, grasses and dwarf shrubs blanket the Arctic Tundra, and lush perennials and trees cluster in the Red Wolf Woods, just like the wolf's native Southeastern United States.

Plants serve a number of purposes at the zoo, from decorative to functional. Zookeepers use some of the plant growth, such as banana leaves and bamboo shoots, as food or skill-building tools for the animals.

Garden Tours are free with paid admission or membership and begin at the Pacific Rim Plaza, just inside the zoo's front gate, at 10 a.m. on the first Sunday of every month. Each tour will focus on a different theme:

- March 6: Plant Journeys
- April 3: Plant Charades
- May 1: Urban Giants
- June 5: Grow Wild – Attracting Backyard Wildlife
- July 3: Plants Gone Wild – A Jungle Paradise
- August 7: The Un-Thirsty Garden – Drought-proof your landscape
- September 4: Leafy and Fruity Hors d'Oeuvres
- October 2: Savage Garden
- November 6: Living Fossils
